Expungement is the legal process of those with a criminal conviction to have their criminal record kept private from public view, but not from law enforcement. Studies show expungement helps people obtain employment, finish their education and helps people put past mistakes behind them so they can become productive citizens. This also has proven to lower the risk of reoffending. Should people convicted of low level, non-violent crimes have an opportunity to get a “clean slate” after being crime free for at least several years.
